was false, and that Mr. Quigs about Brown being a dodger."

Mr. Quigg promptly asked Mr. Hayden to tome up and make good his denials. Hayden evidently was taken by surprise, and after some bluster about every man haying his right to speak, he said that Quigg's statement that Brown was a dodger was false. "Celonel Brown told me himself," said Hayden, "that the reason he did not vote on those bills was because he was in his office in Park Row, hard at work, "When the bills came up for a vote."

"What right had he to be in New-York when bills vitally affecting the interests of his constituents needed his presence in Albany?" asked Mr. Quigg, "We paid him to attend to the people's business in Albany, and yet on your own statement he was in New-York attending to his own business instead."

Mr. Hayden coded his presence in Albany?" asked Mr. Quigg, "We paid him to attend to the people's business in Albany, and yet on your own statement he was in New-York attending to his own business instead."

Mr. Hayden coded his presence in the further end of the hall greatly discomfited, and acknowledging his mistake.

The meeting was one of the most successful in the campaign in the XIVth Congress District. The hall was crowded all the evening, mostly by workingmen. Charles I. Hart presided and besides Mr. Quigg addresses were made by Alfred R. Page, Colonel T. C. Campbell and Mahlon Chance.
